Many are imported from Paris and London, if the labels are to be credited; but equally stylish ones are avowedly the product of New York hands. I can give no clearer idea of the fashions than by briefly diversified examples. An evening bonnet of blue plush has a wide front brim and large flat crown, the covering being brought over to the front and arranged in fan folds, secured in the centre by a steel crescent, and the puffed brim is garnished with pleatings of pale-blue satin ribbon, while clusters of blue ostrich tips fall over the side.

> It is hard to conceive of how the play could have been placed in better hands for a true portrayal, than in those of this, one of the strongest companies ever sent out by the Madison Square Theatre Company. The part of the heroine was well placed in the hands of Miss Belle Gilbert, whose charms and delightful stage demeanor have long since endeared her to Knoxville playgoers. Mr. Edwin Arden played well the role of Dave, and the two drew forth repeated applause. Mr. R. F. McClannin's portrayal of the old unsophisticated farmer and hen-pecked husband, was indeed true to life, and a splendid piece of work, and as the high spirited and domineering wife and mother. Mrs. Berrell was a decided success. She was truly a finished feminine fiend, in its strongest light. The parade of this year was far superior to that of last year, not only in the number of exhibits but in in the number of exhibits, but in the superiority of exhibits and success of the demonstration, which surpassed the most sanguine anticipations.
